W L Ritchie - Aberdeen/Worplesdon Golf Club

A native of Aberdeen, born there in 1884, William Leggat Ritchie, learned his trade as assistant to James Braid at Walton Heath. He had a short stay as pro at King's Links in his home city and was appointed professional at Worplesdon, the club much loved by Bernard Darwin, in 1911. He remained here until 1922 (although he was away on war service from 1915-19). Ritchie moved to the Addington club in Croydon in 1922 and formed a clubmaking business with the Welsh professional, J B Ross, selling "Ritros" brand clubs although the partnership only seems to have lasted about a year.

The set came from the USA and it has been fully restored from myself in my workshop with great care.

The original Hickory shafts produced are still in place.

The shafts have received 30 layers of natural shellac using the old French Polish technic.

The club heads were in pristine conditions and presented very little use.

Repairing old clubs is an art gone missing. Bringing back to playing condition such a great set was a pleasure and see them out on the golf course it is a dream come true. Playing the old game of golf with historical Hickory Clubs is a privilege and I do wish you great fun with them and a lot of good moments with your hickory friends.
